We are in the midst of a revolution in cancer research. This research is helping us to understand the genes and molecules that make cancer cells grow abnormally, and it is allowing us to design treatments that are more effective and have fewer side effects than traditional cancer treatments. Learn more about the cancer research taking place at the University of Iowa Holden Comprehensive Cancer Center, and the opportunities and challenges that need to be addressed as we work to use this knowledge to reduce the burden of cancer for the people of Iowa.

Please feel free to bring your lunch
